Kyle H. Williams joined Moore Ingram Johnson & Steele in 2019 as a member of the firm's workers' compensation defense group. A native of Atlanta, Kyle received his Bachelor of Arts in Philosophy from Georgia State University. He later earned his Juris Doctor from Mercer University School of Law in Macon, GA where he was a recipient of the Equal Access to Justice Scholarship.

During law school, Kyle worked for the Office of the Fulton County District Attorney prosecuting felonies in the office's Gang and Drug Unit under Georgia's Third-Year practice act. His time working for the Fulton County District Attorney afforded him the opportunity to interview and examine witnesses, conduct hearings, and participate in trials while representing the people of Fulton County. Also, Kyle was a member of the Mercer Advocacy Council where he participated on both the Intrastate Moot Court and Frederick Douglas Moot Court teams. He also co-authored an article in 2018 published in the Texas A&M Journal of Property Law entitled, The Ethics of Using Artificial Intelligence to Augment Drafting Legal Documents.

He enjoys reading, traveling, musical theatre, and shooting sports.
